The white settlers, cowboys, prospectors and adventurers are perhaps largely, if not wholly, responsible for the recent Ute outbreak. The Indians are regarded as a species of wild beast, to be imposed upon and shot down. They are the original settlers and are entitled to certain considerations. The greed of the cowboy has probably led him to overstep his rights in the premises and crowd his berds into the Indian domain, which arouses the savage to strike for revenge, and he does. Of course the United States must proeet the settlers against the attacks of these savage Utes, but the cowboy or adventurer who precipitated the trouble should also ome within the line of punishment. It is ardly probable that the outbreak is with-

So the next day they went to the garden, and the hermit had already a leg over the wall, when all of a sudden Touchmenot, who was watching the pair, seized the trespass and ran toward his house holding the holy man fast. Arriving in his kitchen, the brute put him fit a bag, whose mouth he tied with a strong rope and threw it under the table. This done he returned to see if he could not catch the Corsican also, but Luidgi had vanished, and seeing nobody loitering around, he went to the forest to cut a branch of a tree with which he intended to beat the hermit to death.

Corsican deserts a friend in trouble. It is equally true that never he deserts an enemy to whom he returns tooth for tooth and eye for eye (you cannot blame him for that, as it is due to his generous nature), so Luidgi had watched the goings and doings of Touchmenot, and when he saw the oger leaving the house he hastened to the hermit's rescue. He climbed an olive tree, and from there he jumped into a room whose windows were open; his companion was not in the room; he visited successively all the others without finding his man; finally, he arrived in the kitchen calling "Father! Long strips of prepared paper are used for lighting. This paper burns slowly, and when required for lighting the pipe is blown into a flame by a peculiar puff. Any Celestial man, woman or child can produce this flame with a single puff, but a European ac-quires the same ability only by considera-ble practice. As each filling produces only a couple of puffs, the pipe refilled over and over again to obtain satisfaction. Every time a pinch is smoked the remnant is blown out by lifting the tube and blowing vigorously through it from the lower end. The rapidity with which a devotee of this pipe fills it, puffs the paper into a flame, lights the tobacco, blows the paper out again, lifts the tube, blows out the refuse, fills it again, etc., is quite a remarkable performance common Chinaman uses a pipe of primitive pattern, merely a slender point of bamboo, with a hole bored in the side near the closed end.
